Among the guests were Mr. and Mrs. Jack Madert, Mr. and Mrs. Chadbourne, Mr. and Mrs. Claude Thomas, Mr. and Mrs. Ashmun Brown, Mr. and Mrs. William Bergfeld, Mies Hoffman, Mr. Schlinder, Mr. Crosland, Donald Hoffman, Mrs. Goldman, Miss Mittle Burch, and Miss Gridley.

The prizes were won by Mrs. Thomas and Mr. Schlinder.

The Junior Prem at the Catholic University will take place at 8:46 o'clock Monday night at Graduate Hall at the university. This prom is the biggest social event of the year at the university, and as the limited number of tickets have been subscribed for weeks in advance, the dance promises to be a big success.

Plan National Holiday On Jefferson's Birthday

Bills will be introduced in Congres and in State legislatures to make April 13. Thomas Jefferson's birthday, a holi-day, the National Democratic League of Clubs announced today.

It had been heralded as a "small and eafly" function, and, contrary to precedent—the Congressional reception is usually the biggest crush of the White House social season—it was small, the guests not exceeding 2,000; but I did think that it was particularly early. True, the hour was 9 o'clock, the guests were received in good season, and before it o'clock the President and Mrs. Wilson had retired to their apartments on the second floor; but, then, nobody seemed to want to leave. When I left at II:50 or thereshouts the drawing rooms and corridors were still througed with people, laughing and chatting in groups, and they showed no signs of going home. Spirit of Democracy.

Spirit of Democracy. Each of the four state levees at the white House seems to have its own particular flavor and personality.

Brilliance marks the first, the diplomatic reception—this season the Pan-American reception took its place—dignity, the function in honor of the judiciary, while gold lace and brass buttons give a touch of military pomp and circumstance to the army and navy reception.

Last evening's function had the added interest of bringing together for the first time in the social history of the new Congress the more recent as well as the older members of the legislative branch of the administration.

Mrs. Wilson were one of the most becoming gowns of her troussean, a black chiffon velvet, made on simple lines with a perfectly plain trained skirt and a close fitting bodice with a v-shaped decoltage. The flowing

Mrs. Redneld wore a charming mative gown banded in für, and Mrs. Wilson, wife of the Secretary of Labor, wore a gray brocade costume. Miss Agnes Hart Wilson stood near her mother most of the evening, and many of the special guests "behind the line" had a greeting for the Secretary's clever daughter.

Mrs. Burleson, Mrs. Daniels, and Mrs.

Houston were black, and their gowns proved how various black may be. Mrs.

Burleson's gown was of tulle, elaborately embroidered in silver, and the other two gowns were of velvet and jet combined.

I heard many expressions of regret for the absence of the Speaker and Mrs. Clark. Neither did I see Congressman Joseph Cannon, nor the Langworths, nor many others of the Senate and House, who are much in the puband House, who are much in the pub-lic eye-indeed, it is proverbial that Congress is conspicuous rather by its absence than its presence at the annual White House reception given in its white House reception area.

Nevertheless, there were many distinguished personages in the throng. Chief Justice White was one of the guests who arrived late and passed into the Biue Room after greeting the hosta and those assisting.

Much interest naturally attached to the presence of Mrs. James Robert McKee, of New York, daughter of the late President Harrison, and for a time mistress of the White House, who lingered in the precincts behind the line renewing old acquaintances. She were a lovely white gown. Her son, Benjamin McKee, was with her.

White House Guest.

White House Guest.

It was also good to see Miss Gertrude Gordon again. She has been away from Washington so much of late and her friends have missed her. She returns as a guest at the White House.

Last evening she wore a white frock and a lovely corsage bouquet of orchids. When I first saw her she was with Mrs. Wilson's nephew. Bolling Galt, and I was not surprised to see Dr. Grayson in her train much of the evening.

Mrs. Alexander Galt, who was with the little group much of the time, looked unusually well in a greeny-olus gown. In spite of her coloring—she is a decided blonde—I think she is like her distinguished sister.

The Rt. Rev. Etherbert Taibot, Bishop of Pennsylvania, was among the distinguished clergymen present, and I also saw the Rev. William Tayloe Snyder, and his attractive daughter. Miss Phyll's Enyder. Bishop Talbot was with Mrs. H. L. Rust—Mr. Rust was ill and unable to attend. She looked very handsome in a black gown with a garniture of silver beads.

gown of bronse tulls over pink, and looked ever so pretty. Moreover, I was vary much taken with Miss Lansing. very much taken with Miss Lensing, the Secretary's sister, whose silvery hair and young face are charming. She wore white and silver, and "the other Miss Lensing." Jane, I think her name is, had on a green gown.

Green, a pale lettuce green, by the way, seems to be running a close race with sapphire blue as the most popular color of the season, and quite the prettiest thing at the party was Miss Margaret Smith, daughter of Capt, and Mrs. William Strother Smith, in her green frock.

She wore green jade circlets in her ears, but the simple arrangement of her hair took away any suggestion of being "extreme," which they might have imparted.

Miss Margaret Fechteler, who comes home when she comes to Washington for a visit, was there with her uncle skirt and a close fitting bodice with a v-shaped decoltage. The flowing sleeves were of black tulle, and the only trimming was a corsage empiecement of sliver embroidery and a band of sliver tissue across the end of the square out train.

Mrs. Marehall looked like a girl in a short gown of American Beauty tulle, ambroidered in gold beads and Mrs. McAdoo was all in white. She wears white so much and I don't wonder, for it is most becoming. This particular gown has gome exquisite point lace about the bodice and a court train of satin.

The only vacant place in the line was that usually filled by the wife of the Secretary of War, and there were many expressions of regret for the absence of the last gracious occupant of the place. Mrs. Lindley M. Garrison.

Mrs. Marshall and Mrs. Lane, both fatigue of receiving extremely well. Mrs. Lane were a lovely gown of purple tulle over purple satin, and carried Roman hyacinths and violets.
